Training

Wilderness First Responder Course

Saturday, May 21 through Sunday, May 29
Marlboro College

Marlboro College will sponsor a hands-on Wilderness First Responder course to train people to deal with medical emergencies when they are miles from help and dialing 911 is not an option. Classes will be taught by instructors from Wilderness Medical Associates, leaders in the field of wilderness medical training. Mornings will be devoted to lectures, while afternoons and evenings will be spent outside working on everything from stretcher construction to full-scale rescue simulations. The course is recommended for all outdoor professionals and enthusiasts who spend time in remote areas, and for travellers to third world areas without medical facilities. Graduates will be certified by Wilderness Medical Associates. For more information, including cost, please contact Randy Knaggs at Marlboro College (802) 258-9253.
